

Scope-Creep Ask Cards — Round 2 (Scope Negotiation)

Day 5 · Round 2 handout. For the triad playing the non-technical stakeholder. You arrive with a scope-creep ask the author triad must handle without breaking their PRD. The author defends PRD Section 3 non-goals and Section 11 out-of-scope follow-ups — deciding whether to hold the line, cut existing scope, offer a phased plan, or escalate.

Public surface (both triads may read): the role and the headline ask. Hidden (roleplayer only): the real driver, your fallback, and how immovable you are. Don't reveal the Hidden section — make the author discover which trade-space axis you actually care about.

All asks are grounded in the FieldPulse "End-of-Day Reconcile" world.

Card 1 — PM Director

Public surface

- Owns the product line; RACI A on scope and launch date
- Headline ask: "Marketing wants a manager-view dashboard in Reconcile before launch. Small ask, but they've committed to a campaign around it."

Hidden — roleplayer only

- The real driver is the campaign date, not the dashboard itself. If the author offers a phased plan (dashboard in a fast-follow that still lands inside the campaign window), you can take it.
 - Your immovable point is the campaign — you'll flex on what ships for it. If the author only argues "it's out of scope" without offering the campaign a win, keep pushing.
 - Fallback you'll accept: a read-only stub for the campaign + full dashboard in v1.1, with a committed date.

Card 2 — Customer Success Lead

Public surface

- Owns renewals for the top-tier accounts
- Headline ask: "Our top-3 customer just asked for tablet support in Reconcile. They've made it a renewal condition."

Hidden — roleplayer only

- Tablet support is already a PRD Section 11 out-of-scope follow-up (deferred to v2). The account knows this is a stretch — the "renewal condition" is real but negotiable.
- What you actually need is something to bring back to the customer that isn't "no." A committed v2 date, or a written phased commitment, defuses it.
- Push the author on time (can v2 come sooner?) before you accept a hold-the-line "no." If they hold, they must give you the reasoning and the date to relay — a bare no fails.

Card 3 — Sales VP

Public surface

- Owns the enterprise pipeline; carries weight with the GM
- Headline ask: "I have a deal in flight that needs Reconcile to support multi-shop manager view. Help me close it."

Hidden — roleplayer only

- The deal is real but not yet signed — you're using urgency as leverage. Multi-shop view is a large scope expansion, not a small one.
- What moves you: a credible trade. If the author offers to cut a lower-value PRD item to fit a thin version of multi-shop view, or offers a phased commitment tied to the deal closing, you'll engage.
- You have authority the author might defer to — but a good TPM makes you name the scope you'd trade away rather than just adding on top. If they escalate to the GM cleanly with a trade-space framing, that's a win, not a loss.

Roleplayer reminders

- Lead with the headline ask only. Force the author to ask "why now / why this" to surface your real driver.
- The exercise tests whether they find the trade space — which of scope / time / quality / resources you actually care about — and offer movement on a different axis than the one you're pushing.
- Accept a good "yes-but," a phased plan, or a well-reasoned "no with a date." Reject a flat "it's out of scope" with no alternative.

- Every round ends with a specific outcome: agreement, phased commitment, deferral to a date, or a named escalation.

Author's decision menu (for reference)

When the ask lands, you have four honest moves:

1. Hold the line — and capture the no with reasoning (defend the Section 3 non-goal).
2. Cut existing scope to add the new ask (name what you'd drop).
3. Offer a phased plan — thin version now, full version on a committed date.
4. Escalate — because the stakeholder has authority you'd defer to (but escalate with a trade-space framing, not as a surrender).
